Internationally best-selling author Umberto Eco is a master stylist whose books, including The Name of the Rose and Baudolino, have been savored by millions around the world. Now, with

The Mysterious Flame of Queen Loana , Eco crafts another of the ambitious and breathtaking novels that are his trademark. Baudolino talks with the emperor and falls in love with the empress "The world condemns liars who do nothing but lie, even about the most trivial things, and it rewards poets, who lie only about the greatest things." Baudolino by Umberto Eco It is April 1204, and Constantinople, the splendid capital of the Byzantine Empire, is being sacked and burned by the knights of the Fourth Crusade. Saint Baudolino (c. 700 - c. 740) was a hermit who lived at the time of the Lombard king Liutprand in Forum Fulvii (now Villa del Foro), a locality on the lower reaches of the river Tanaro in north-west Italy. A self-proclaimed liar, Baudolino is an unreliable narrator, to say the least. As the novel progresses, he shifts from taking credit for creating the kingdom of Prester John to heading off in search of it himself. Umberto Eco's new novel Baudolino is a huge, beautifully conceived and executed tale of history, passion, love, imagination and guile. Challenging and illuminating, full of the digression, invention and brilliance Eco always provides, the book is an absolute joy to be savored.
