DESCRIPTION OF THE BOOK CAN YOU TOLERATE THIS?

Can You Tolerate This? is a collection of twenty-one personal essays by Ashleigh Young. In this spirited and singular book, Young roams freely from preoccupation to preoccupation - Hamilton's 90s music scene, family histories, a boy with a rare skeletal disease, a stone-collecting French postman, a desire for impossible physical transformation - trying to find some measure of clarity amid uncertainty. How to bear each moment of experience: the inconsequential as much as the shattering? Her search takes us through poignant, funny and raw territories.

growing up in a small New Zealand town and making her way as an adult into the wider world. "Can You Tolerate This?," by Ashleigh Young (Riverhead ) Young is a sharp observer who revels in her sense of the absurd and uses precise language and striking images. You imagine fissures appearing in your body as if during a quake." Growing up in Te Kuiti, New Zealand — the sheep and shearing capital of the world — Young spins a web of stories from yearning, loneliness and naivete, which she now looks back on with a droll, self-effacing voice. In the epigraph to "The Te Kuiti Underground", one of the 21 personal essays in Can You Tolerate This?, Wellington poet, tutor and blogger Ashleigh Young quotes the American writer Russell Hoban: "It seems to me the realest reality lives somewhere beyond the edge of human vision." Can You Tolerate This? is an assured debut from a prodigiously talented, empathic writer whose prose shines as brightly as her poetry. Read Full Review >> CAN YOU TOLERATE THIS?
