DESCRIPTION OF THE BOOK HEMINGWAY IN ITALY

Ernest Hemingway is most often associated with Spain, Cuba, and Florida, but Italy was equally important in his life and work. This book, the first on the subject, explores Hemingway's visits throughout his life to such places as Sicily, Genoa, Rapallo, Cortina, and Venice. Richard Owen describes how Hemingway first visited Italy during World War I, an experience that set the scene for A Farewell to Arms. The writer then returned after World War II, where he would find inspiration for Across the River and into the Trees. When Men without Women was published, some reviewers declared Hemingway to be at heart a reporter preoccupied with bullfighters, soldiers, prostitutes, and hard drinkers, but their claims failed to note that he also wrote sensitively and passionately about love and loss against an Italian backdrop. Owen highlights the significance of Italy in the writer's life. On the night he shot himself in July 1961, for example, Hemingway sang a song he had once learned in Cortina d'Ampezzo. Hemingway returned to Italy again and again, and the places he visited or used as inspiration for his work are many. At the same time, the inspiration goes both ways: Owen describes how the fifteenth century villa Ca Erizzo at Bassano del Grappa, where the American Red Cross ambulances were stationed, is now a museum devoted to the writer and World War I. Showing how the Italian landscape, from the Venetian lagoon to the Dolomites and beyond, deeply affected one of the greatest writers of the twentieth century, Hemingway in Italy demonstrates that this country belongs alongside Spain as a key influence on his writing and why the Italian themselves took Hemingway and his writing to heart."

HEMINGWAY IN ITALY - EATALY MAGAZINE | EATALY

Hemingway's first time in Italy wasn't a happy visit, it was a war. 18 year old Ernest had come to Europe as a soldier and, in 1918, he encountered the charms and beauties of the Eternal Country for the first time. Because of his poor eyesight, he was assigned to support duties and ended up collaborating with the Red Cross as a driver. Contributors analyze Hemingway's Italian works, including A Farewell to Arms, Across the River and into the Trees, lesser-known short stories, fables, and even a previously unpublished Hemingway sketch, "Torcello Piece." The essays provide fresh insights on Hemingway's Italian life, career, and imagination. The Ernest Hemingway Foundation was established in 1965 by Mary Hemingway, Ernest's widow, "for the purposes of awakening, sustaining an interest in, promoting, fostering, stimulating, supporting, improving and developing literature and all forms of literary composition and expression." Kennedy Presidential Library; After recuperating at home, Hemingway renewed his efforts at writing, for a while worked at odd jobs in Chicago, and sailed for France as a foreign correspondent for the Toronto Star. Mary was eager to visit that part of Italy even if it meant leaving her husband behind. Early one morning in the middle of November, with Hemingway in his bathrobe waving from the porch, she took the vaporetto into Venice, picked up the Buick at the garage, and drove south, with their chauffeur, Riccardo. This collection of nineteen essays evolved from the July 2002 Hemingway Society Conference in Stresa, Italy. Its editor, Rena Sanderson, graciously acknowledges what she calls its "groundbreaking precursor," Hemingway in Italy and Other Essays, edited by Robert W. Lewis; that collection, too, evolved from a Hemingway Society Conference, the 1986 meeting in Lignano Sabbiadoro. Hemingway grew disenchanted with Italy because of Mussolini's oppressive government. His fond memories while he was younger in Italy turned morose because of a tyrant and his repressive political ideology. Ernest Hemingway (1899-1961), born in Oak Park, Illinois, started his career as a writer in a newspaper office in Kansas City at the age of seventeen. After the United States entered the First World War, he joined a volunteer ambulance unit in the Italian army. Serving at the front, he was wounded. Hemingway returned to Italy in 1923, stayed in Cortina, and wrote Out of Season. In 1948, Hemingway visited Venice for the first time. During his stay he hunted duck and wrote Across the River and Into the Trees, while on the island of Torcello.
