"Someone like me" is the correct one. There's a lot to say about the usage I guess, but to make a long story short: Me is a so-called objective pronoun, opposed to subjective pronouns (I, you, she, he). I Like Myself by Karen Beaumont | Read Along High on energy and imagination, this ode to self-esteem encourages kids to appreciate everything about themselves—inside and out. Just from the title and cover, I was excited to read this book to my child. But when they say don't judge a book by its cover, believe it. The book starts off fine but by the fourth page it gets really strange from there on out.

About "I Like Myself" This song was composed for the 1955 musical film It's Always Fair Weather, in which the self-loathing hero (Gene Kelly) celebrates finding a woman to fall in love with. The book 'I Like Myself!' by Karen Beaumont explores creating self confidence. Students will listen to and discuss the story, as well as complete a project. How to Like Yourself Five Parts: Quieting Your Inner Critic Building Your Self-Esteem Changing How You View Yourself Interacting with Others Getting Help Community Q&A One of the most difficult things we can do is learn to like ourselves. Find great deals on eBay for i like myself. Shop with confidence. I agree with Myridon and Forero that there is a notional difference in using the apparently ungrammatical "I love me". Certainly "I love myself too" implies "She loves herself" rather than "She loves me" and I 'feel' a distinction between the reflexive appreciation of "I love myself" and the objective "I love me". I like the way I look, not a vanity thing, I'm just blessed with good genes and like to take care of myself. 2. I'm creative and what brings me great joy is the fact that I believe my friends genuinely love what I produce whether it be an enormous multi coloured chocolate brownie birthday cake or a hand painted tobacco tin with cheeky personal.
