DESCRIPTION OF THE BOOK THE FALCON, VOL. 1

The Falcon radio series aired from 1943 until 1954. "The Falcon" was an alternate identity for detective Michael Waring. Like the Falcon movies, the radio plots mixed danger, romance, and comedy in equal parts. Each show began with a telephone ringing and Michael Waring, the Falcon, answering the phone. Speaking with a woman whose voice was never heard, Waring would explain that he had an urgent situation he had to deal with. This led into the standard opening, followed by the week's tale of adventure. Often, incompetent police were unable to solve the mysteries without his help. Waring was billed on radio as a freelance detective who was "always ready with a hand for oppressed men and an eye for repressed women." Berry Kroeger, James Meighan, Les Tremayne, Les Damon, and George Petrie portrayed "The Falcon" during its radio run. The twelve episodes included here, which aired in 1950 and 1951, are "The Case of the Carved Ham," "The Case of the Gangster's Girl," "The Case of the Mighty Muscle," "The Case of the Invisible Thug," "The Case of the Raw Deal," "The Case of the Harried Husband," "The Case of the Stooge's Errand," "The Case of the Puzzling Pinup," "The Case of the Widow's Gorilla," "The Case of the Rich Racketeer," "The Case of the Double Exposure," and "The Case of the Disappearing Doll."

Falcon later encounters Nemesis at the Kane building site, stopping him from throwing rubble onto the crowd and saving Tork, who attempted to shoot down the villain. Nemesis defeats Falcon and manages to escape. The Falcon, Captain America's black partner, has gone rogue. Has he really, or is the US government playing two friends against each other, to cover up the ghastly secret uncovered by the Guantanamo prisoner the Falcon broke out of the camp? As such, THE FALCON MYSTERY MOVIE COLLECTION Volume 1 - in all its 3-disc glory - presents seven Falcon mysteries. These capers, widely regarded as fun little B-pictures and bustling with comic banter, motor along at a good clip, each running over an hour, but barely. THE FALCON was an entertaining B movie series designed to fill the second half of double bills in movie houses during the 1940s. George Sanders starred in the first three entries, handing over the reins over to his real life brother Tom Conway, who appeared in the succeeding ten episodes.
