For over two decades the NZMSC has been running motorcycle rider training courses, ranging from beginner to professional level. Thus, the NZMSC is well aware of the difficulty of not only getting motorcyclists to undertake formal rider training but, having got the rider to the course, of teaching him/her the many skills allegedly required to survive on a motorcycle. Once an accident happens, it must be reported immediately to the appointed person for further investigation and to the government as per legislation. Accidents are investigated in order to determine the cause or causes of an accident or series of accidents so as to prevent further incidents of a similar kind. ACCIDENT reporting helps safety experts identify hazard trends and prevent similar accidents. All accidents should be reported to the local safety office and to the immediate commander or supervisor whose operation, personnel and equipment are involved.
